YANKEES WIN OPENER FROM NATIONALS 3-

Johnson's Pitching Fails to Stop New York Team-Quinn Hit Freely, but Is Effective in Pinches.

By WILLIAM PEET.

Pitcher Walter Johnson, the hero of the opening game of the season, failed to show any of that shut-out stuff against New York, 3; Washington, 1. the New York Yankees in the first of the series here yesterday afternoon, Score-New York, 3; Nationals, 1.

In addition to wildness at critical stages, Johnson nearly killed off a promising young athlete in the first inning, when one of his terrific inshoots hit New York at Washington. Leftfielder Birdle Cree, of the Yankees, in the back of the head. Cree flopped to the ground, and the players gathered around him with white, scared faces. The young man revived in a few minutes but was so dazed that he hardly knew what was going on. After trying to continue in the game, he had to give it up, and Laporte replaced him. A physician who attended Cree stated that had the ball landed half an inch lower, Cree ! would never have known what hit him.

The game from a local standpoint was a frost. The Nationals could do nothing with Pitcher Jack Quinn except in the m third inning, when one run came across. Outhit the Visitors.

The box score shows more hits and fewer errors for Washington than for New York, but at least four of the local hits were infield scratches, and McBride's error was rather costly, for had he handled the ball cleanly a double play would have resulted and those two runs credited to the Yankees in the fourth stanza never would have happened.

There were no spectacular fielding stunts. A crowd of 5,600 fans turned out was not out at the park yesterday. to welcome the Nationals home after a disastrous trip to Boston, and in view their seats until the last man was out. to lay off a few days. The crowd not only waited for hits that never came, but offered all sorts of encouragement in the shape of thirty-third present as far as their infield is condegree rooting.

The hitting honors go to Jack Lelivelt, good. who is credited with three bingles out of the same number of times at bat. Hal Chase, as usual, pulled in a number of scoops, digging the ball out of the dirt on

He was full of ginger during them. Gessler smashed a beauty over practice yesterday. It looked like a beautiful one-hand pick-up of Unglaub's to the plate and ignominiously struck out. McBride's easy roller forced Gessler at second for the third out.

In the fourth, the Yankees won the game. Gardner, first up, died on a grounder to Elberfeld. Foster stopped one of Johnson's speedy shoots with his ribs, and walked. Johnson followed this up by passing Austin. Sweeney slammed a grass-cutter straight to McBride, the ball shooting between his props into center field. Milan, coming in at full speed, scooped up the ball and slammed it home just in time to catch Foster, who tried to score. McBride's slip-up proved costly. He was all set for a double play, which would have retired the side. Instead, two runs came over a few minutes later, for, as Street nipped off Foster at home; he was spiked in the knee, and, examining the injured member, tossed the ball on the ground to Johnson, Austin going to third before the pitcher could recover the Austin Easily Escapes.

With Quinn at the bat, Sweeney started for second to draw the throw. Street slammed to Elberfeld instead and caught Austin napping. Then came the usual run-down between the bases. Elberfeld, right at Austin's back, chased the latter home. Street, for some reason or other, anchored himself midway between third and home, and Johnson was standing five feet out of the base line, with the result that Austin dashed across the plate with nobody to check him, Elberfeld pulling up, with the ball in his hand, a bad second. Had Street been strictly on the job and waiting for Elberfeld's throw at home, Austin's goose would have been cooked. While this was going on Sweeney waltzed around to the third station, and scored a minute later on Quinn's safe clout to right field.

In the sixth the Yankees added another tally to a great extent by luck, as Austin drove a high fly between Milan and Gessler, the ball getting away from Doc after the latter had made a headlong dive after it. Austin reached third on the blow, and crossed the pan on Quinn's second single to an unguarded spot in

TWO NEW YORK PLAYERS HURT; STALLINGS WIRES FOR HELP.

The New York Yankees suffered heavily as the result of yesterday's game, and will face the Nationals to-day with a badly crippled team. Second Baseman Gardner can hardly walk, as the result of an injured knee, sustained while trying to block Unglaub in the sixth. Shortstop Foster, who was hit just below the floating ribs by one of Johnson's shoots, had to take to his bed right after the game and may be out for a week.

Manager Stallings last night telegraphed to New York for Roach, a substitute shortstop, to report in time for the game to-day, and Jack Knight is slated to take Gardner's place at second.
